

Lesson 4: The Five Principles of Citizenship

While the definition of “citizenship” is certainly evolving, especially given the number of online and offline communities we all belong to today, the central principles of “good citizenship” are evergreen. Learning these principles (definitions adapted from Education World) gives students a framework for digital citizenship. This framework comes in handy as they discover that while most offline communities have rules, rights, and responsibilities that have evolved over time, the same does not always hold true for online communities which are newer. Thus, these five principles help guide students towards good citizenship, both online and off.

Learning Objectives

Students will...

- Understand what it means to be a member, or citizen, of a community.
- Consider all the communities they are members of.
- Think of ways community members demonstrate five principles of citizenship.

Introducing The Lesson

Ask students: Have you ever ridden a bike? Traveled in a car? If they rode a bike, ask what they did when they arrived at a stop sign or traffic signal. Ask: Did you stop, slow down, keep going? How did you know what to do? If they traveled in a car, ask: Who was driving? What did the driver do at a stop sign or light? What gave your driver the right to drive? Then ask: Have you ever stood in a line? If so, ask if they joined the line at the back or did they go directly to the front? Why or why not? Guide students towards the understanding that citizens are guided by rules, rights, and responsibilities that are generally understood and agreed to by all community members.

The Lesson

1. Tell students that we all belong to, or are “citizens” of many different groups or “communities” that are guided by rules or principles. Explain and have them record (in their books) the following definitions:

CITIZEN: A member of a community.

COMMUNITY: A group of people sharing a space or having characteristics in common.

2. Explain that the smallest community they belong to is probably their family. Ask students to think of some of the other communities they belong to, such as their class, their school, a sports team, choral group, church, etc. Have them take a moment to list (in their books) all the communities they are “citizens” of.
3. After students have listed the communities they belong to, explain that being a “good citizen” is guided by five important principles or themes. Take a few minutes to describe and discuss each one:

- Honesty is being truthful and fair. A good citizen must be honest with others, and with themselves.
- Compassion is the emotion of caring for people and for other living things. Compassion gives a citizen an emotional bond with their world.
- Respect is showing regard or consideration for others. Sometimes respect is even directed toward inanimate things or ideas. A good citizen should have respect for laws.
- Responsibility is about being answerable and accountable. For example, one of the main responsibilities of a student is to learn. They must educate themselves so that they can achieve their full potential.

Actual Student Work

- Courage is doing the right thing even when it's unpopular, difficult, or dangerous. Many people throughout history—such as Martin Luther King Jr., Susan B. Anthony, and Mahatma Gandhi—have demonstrated great courage.

4. Activity: Once you have discussed these principles, divide your class into groups of 3-4 students. Assign one offline community to each group for them to discuss, such as: their class, a sports team, a club, their church, their immediate family, their extended family, their state, their county, their country (or let them choose one community from the lists they made in step 2). Challenge students to think of at least one example of how their community might demonstrate each of the five principles. Every group should choose a member to record what they discuss. If your students need help getting started, share the following example.

5. In the following example, students considered how members of a baseball team might demonstrate the five principles. Here is what they came up with:

- Honesty: It takes honesty to tell each other how to play better.
- Compassion: It's important to show compassion to the other team if they lose.
- Respect: Shaking hands with opponents after a game shows respect.
- Responsibility: It takes responsibility to show up to games on time and do well.
- Courage: It takes a lot of courage to go up and hit the ball.

6. Next, have groups work together to create small posters illustrating the examples they came up (example below). Ask groups to share their work with the entire class.

Goal

Students begin to understand that “good citizenship,” both online and off, is guided by simple principles.

*Definitions for the five themes adapted from Education World.

CITIZEN:

A member of a community.

COMMUNITY:

A group of people sharing a space or having characteristics in common.

- HONESTY is being truthful and fair. A good citizen must be honest with others, and with themselves.
- COMPASSION is the emotion of caring for people and for other living things. Compassion gives a citizen an emotional bond with their world.
- RESPECT is showing regard or consideration for others. Sometimes respect is even directed toward inanimate things or ideas. A good citizen should have respect for laws.
- RESPONSIBILITY is about being answerable and accountable. For example, one of the main responsibilities of a student is to learn. They must educate themselves so that they can achieve their full potential.
- COURAGE is doing the right thing even when its unpopular, difficult, or dangerous. Many people throughout history—such as Martin Luther King Jr., Susan B. Anthony, and Mahatma Gandhi—have demonstrated great courage.
